A novel and potent factor that accumulates in the ventral half of the light zone of the lymphocytes of the sea urchin, Strongylocentrotus intermedius. A novel and potent factor that accumulates in the ventral half of the light zone of the lymphocytes of the sea urchin, Strongylocentrotus intermedius, has been identified. This factor appears to have a molecular weight of about 32,000 and a sedimentation coefficient of about 9,000. The factor is produced by the aboral cell type and lost upon aboralization. It is secreted to the cell surface during a brief period of about 2 h and is removed from the cell surface during a subsequent prolonged period of approximately 3 h. The factor is stable in neutral phosphate buffers for periods of up to 100 h. The factor remains active in the presence of protease inhibitors. Q: Why is it not possible to access the returned value of my np.any() function? This is my code: def is\_empty\_list(lst): return np.any(lst) == 0 I call this function in the main as such: >>> is\_empty\_list([]) True However, when I try to access the value in np.any() it doesn't work: >>> np.any([]) 0 Shouldn't it return 1 because any(lst) == 1 if lst is not an empty list? A: numpy.any(lst) == 0 is always True: boolean values compare equal to 0. Any element in the list will return False, so then nothing is True. You need to drop the == 0. Q: Is a minimal graph with circular offsprings planar? Is it true that if a graph is finite with no loops or edges incident on a vertex of degree 1 then it is planar? A: One example of a graph with  $n+1$  edges and a minimal planar graph with  $n$  vertices would be  $(\mathbb{P}_5, \mathbb{P}_4)$ . Conversely, any minimal planar graph with  $n$  vertices and  $n+1$  edges would contain the (scattered) graph  $(\mathbb{P}_5, \mathbb{P}_5)$
