different IP addresses at once, making it an ideal tool for checking security and firewall configurations on your PC.Q: How do I get the value of a NSString in the viewDidLoad() of my UIViewController? The purpose of this program is to pull a NSString from my singleton NSStringclass called menuLabels to my UIViewController in the viewDidLoad() method. I have looked and tried everything that

I can think of and yet I can not get a return of my NSString value from the UIViewController. NSString *response = [self.sharedSingleton getSingleWordFromMenuLabels]; if (response) { _singleWord = [response description]; NSLog(@"%@ ", response); } A: You can simply pass it as a parameter to the view controller. Something like this (I'm not a Swift person, but I think it should be close enough. Just substitute the call to the property in the "get the value of a NSString in the viewDidLoad() of my UIViewController" bit): -

(void)viewDidLoad { [super viewDidLoad]; NSString *response = [self.sharedSingleton getSingleWordFromMenuLabels]; if (response) { _singleWord = [response description]; NSLog(@"%@@", response); } }
