Adobe After Effects CC Classroom in a Book (2014 release).Q: How can I make sure that the tables name and column name are the same in the view and the DB? I just found out that it is possible to see the database structure inside a View. Which is great in cases where the View is meant to be read only and will never be updated. However I have a new view which has some of the structures fields different in the view and the DB. For instance I have the following fields: Field | Type

----- id | bigint(20) unsigned user_id| bigint(20) unsigned and their view:

Field | Type ----- id |
bigint(20) unsigned user_id| bigint(20) unsigned user_id_2| bigint(20) unsigned So I could use the information in this table to filter users depending on the filter they use and it would yield different results. How can I prevent this? I am using MySql and InnoDB as well as PHP MySql Connector. A simple way would be to use the name of the table as in the query without any "table" between name and id, but I'm not sure if this will cause additional table locking issues or not. The problem here is that I use MySQL Workbench to change the name of the field in the DB. I don't want to do that manually.

Is there a better way to do this? A: My suggestion is to not have different structures. That would probably require extra effort from a DBMS provider as
