Massachusetts teen spurned sex with stranger BOSTON — When she was 14, the girl decided that she no longer wanted to sleep with her mom's best friend who had frequently propositioned her. The girl told police on Monday that she was appalled. The girl said that after a couple of months of spurning, the man set his sights on her younger sister. By the time the mother found out, her daughter had begun a sexual relationship with the man. And, the mother's friend had helped her sister provide her with contraception and date rape drugs. Fourteen-year-old girls were making the ultimate mistake in new research on sex and consent that reinforces common misperceptions about how young women think and act. In the study, researchers found that even middle school girls felt pressure not to divulge their sexual decisions, regardless of age. The girl told investigators that her mother's friend said she was experienced and would be willing to "take it slow" with the man. "She was like, you're 14 years old. You're not ready." The mother and her two daughters talked to the man's son about the situation and encouraged the man to drop the matter, but he persisted. "He just kept saying 'that's my daughter' in a weirdly cocky tone," the mother said. "He could have easily been a middle-aged man, but he was old enough to have sex." In a recent study, Deborah Thorne, an assistant professor at the University of Wisconsin in Madison, found that teenage girls were more likely to lie about a sexual encounter if they were in a heterosexual relationship. The research, published in March in the journal Pediatrics, found that 76 percent of the more than 300 girls who reported having sex lied to their parents about it. Thorne believes that this is because teenagers thought that their parents would disapprove of premarital sex. Thorne, who is presenting her findings Monday at the annual meeting of the American Association of Pediatrics, said that when girls lie about having sex, their parents tend to dismiss their stories as "

Date, autodata, %. the recent depressions in Egypt and Tunisia, the National Endowment for Democracy has reported that Egypt and Tunisia have not been full-fledged democracy yet: "State power remains in the hands of the security services and the other branches of the armed forces, and the constitution is adopted by a constituent assembly selected by the state and approved by the president." The end of government in Egypt would most probably involve President Obama declaring his desire to remove President Morsi and placing an interim government in power until a new, democratic government can be installed. The U.S. government would then provide additional military assistance to that interim government. The people of Egypt, in contrast to the leaders of Egypt, would be better served by democratic reform that would dismantle authoritarianism and pave the way for a genuine democracy. The people of Egypt want an end to domination by the Muslim Brotherhood. In contrast to what Mitt Romney, Newt Gingrich, and others claim, the people of Egypt would support any strong leadership from an Egyptian government that would openly cooperate with the United States and would strengthen the United States' role in the region by restoring its reputation as a responsible actor that preserves the peace.
