Defense readiness: The most cynical campus scam July 11, 2015 - 23:16 By Emiliano C. Gutiérrez During the 2014-2015 academic year, not one, but two campus police departments were initiated and two campus non-university clubs were formed, due to a $13 million Campus and Community Threat Assessment ("CCTA"). According to the U.S. General Accountability Office, campus safety is the most important issue for students, with one in six 18 to 24 year-olds reporting that they have been injured or threatened because of safety concerns. Meanwhile, 41 percent of students reported that being a victim of a crime in the last year at their school was a concern. A recent (April) Rand study has found that almost 40 percent of Americans report that they have been victims of price-gouging at a place of business or public transit. Experts caution that price-gouging has been around for decades and is largely a non-issue. But in an environment of declining consumer confidence, with consumers more and more deterred by a lack of respect for intellectual property and openness in our society, it is easy for price-gougers to mis-think their target markets. The most significant piece of legislation known as the Anti-Cyber Crime & Protection Act of 2010 is its Section 1101. This is the part of the bill that expands federal criminal law protections of intellectual property, making it a crime to knowingly and willfully "manufacture, import, offer to sell, sell, or possess, in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce, a product that is primarily designed or produced for the purpose of commercial exploitation of an "intellectual property right." This is the newly-invented name for a concept that has been around for ages in other areas of law. It is a "steal-and-sell" mentality that is a game of hustling the state's most valuable asset—its young people—with the only currency being a government-issued diploma, credential, title, or diploma-mill product. Imagine for a moment, if a producer of
